- Promoting Women's Participation in Cross-border Trade in South Asia, Written by – Talajeh Livani & Jennifer Solotaroff

ABSTRACT

Historically, practitioners and policymakers have overlooked gender issues in the trade space; however, research in recent decades strongly suggests that trade is not gender neutral. Cross-border trade produces changes in employment and prices, and these changes have different effects on women and men. Moreover, because women and men do not have equal access to education, networks, transportation and productive resources, their ability to seize trade-related opportunities differs. General trade barriers, such as deficient infrastructure and cumbersome regulatory and documentary requirements, also have gender-differentiated impacts.

- Planning and Budgeting for Women's Empowerment in India : A Historical Process, Written by – Sona Mitra

ABSTRACT

This article is an overview of the Indian planning exercise from the lens of women. It provides a historical examination of the overall plan process in India, beginning from the First Five Year Plan and how it journeyed through the several plans to finally integrate with the women's question in India and connect with the larger women's movement. The article traces the emergence of gender responsive budgeting as part of the process financing the development of women.

- Understanding Women's Aspirations : A Study in Three Indian States, Written by – Gitanjali Chaturvedi & Garima Sahai

ABSTRACT

This study provides an insight to the aspirations of women and girls in three states in India. This study is a product of primary research, based on focus group discussions and interviews, that highlights the voices of women in remote rural districts as well as tribal areas where women want jobs, security, savings, education and a happy life. Women in peri-urban areas are more confident of realizing their aspirations than those in rural areas. Younger women are more aspirational, and thus they are less willing to do manual labour.

Antyajaa – Indian Journal of Women and Social Change - Vol.4, No.1, June, 2019

- Women's Work in Response to Urbanization : Evidence from Odisha, Written by – Arup Mitra

ABSTRACT

This article examines the impact of urbanization as a vehicle of modernization on a variable like women workforce participation rate (WFPR), which is highly sensitive to social and cultural factors. Based on district level data, urbanization and women work participation are seen to have a negative association both in the rural and urban areas, although, ideally speaking, urbanization is expected to raise work opportunities. Owing to compulsions, women from poor households participate in the labour market which may result in a positive relationship between poverty and female work participation rate.

- Imperfect Information in Menstrual Health and the Role of Informed Choice, Written By – Tanya Mahajan

ABSTRACT

This article explores how imperfect information and the culture of silence around menstruation have shaped the menstrual hygiene product market. It is generally considered that the use of sanitary napkins is equivalent to hygiene. This view is critically evaluated in light of evidence. In a highly competitive market, materials used in sanitary napkin products have evolved significantly. Policymakers and regulators need to be informed about the nature of products entering the Indian market and their implications on women's health and cost to the environment.

- A Narrative Exposition on Public Toilet Usage by Women : A Study from Warangal, By – Y.Malini Reddy, Srividya Raghavan & Srinivas Chary Vedala

ABSTRACT

Despite the heightened emphasis on the sanitation agenda of the country, driven by both international and national development goals, there is little scholarly work to base our understanding of infrastructural needs of users for effective implementation. This research was conceived as a part of an extended study to assess sanitation needs in the city of Warangal, Telangana, India. The aim of this study is, specifically, to understand the needs of women for public toilets (PTs) and sanitation facilities. This article presents the results from the analysis of interviews conducted among a cross section of women from various walks of life, and of different ages and qualifications.
